

RIGHT: Turning a bowl, like the one you see here, can help to feed the hungry

Bowls for Hunger website

For now, Bowls for Hunger is more or less an information site, but a great one at that. The mission is simple: the organisers connect woodturners with organisations that can use their bowls to help feed the hungry. On the website you can find information about Empty Bowls events in your area and the ultimate aim is to get woodturners in touch with events, that will eventually allow the website to grow to have more information on how to turn bowls, photos of events, videos and links. Eventually, it will also incentivize chapters and members to get involved.

Empty Bowls is a framework for how to hold an event, available to any organisation that could use it. Steve Worcester would like to get Bowls for Hunger known throughout the UK, so please visit the website and see if you can help.

The website contains many links: those to help you become a better bowl maker, links to help you find tools and suppliers, and the most important link – where you can give your bowls or money to help feed the hungry. But what if you are not a woodturner but still want to help? You can find an event in your area where you can buy bowls or give money to feed the hungry. See below for details.
